A. 10 pointer 5,400-6,300 degrees F

RED

type: M

B. 10 pointer 10,800-13,5000 degrees F

WHITE

type: F

C. 10 pointer 20,8000-45,000 degrees F

type: B

11. Growth Theory is quite a sexy field in economics these days, especially in the Bay Area. But our question hearkens back to the days the field was still in its infancy. One of the fundamental equations of development economics states the growth in total output will be the savings ratio over the capital output ratio, or  $g = s/k$ . For 20 points, name this equations called after the English and American economists who independently came up with this model in the 1940s.

ANS: HARROD-DOMAR

Of course the main limitation of the Harrod-Domar approach is that it black-boxes the capital-output ratio. For 10 points, name Evesy Domar's future MIT colleague and Nobel Prize winner who would become the father of neoclassical growth theory, based on his work in the 1950s and 60s.

ANS: Robert M. SOLOW
